Winter Thoughts

I understand that winter as a season can be challenging, but I love it. I have always been a fan of winter activities. Growing up in New York meant freezing temperatures and lots of moisture. My six brothers, my sister, and I were not only out from sun-up to sun-down in the summer months. We were also outside all day in winter, either ice skating(my love), sledding, playing ice-hockey, or building igloos to have snow ball fights. We also took long walks in the woods around our house to just wonder at the way the snow and ice covered the branches of the trees and undergrowth. I really hope that this generation of kids is enjoying the beauty and opportunities that nature gives to us-no matter the season. I hope they do.

Dress Down Day

This Thursday, January 20, is a dress down for a donation. I would still love to help the Alvarado family with any amount of donation that you can give. Mr. Alvarado, although home is scheduled for surgery and physical therapy to help him fully recover-which is our prayer.
